What is TASC?

TASC stands for “Test Assessing Secondary Completion”. Formerly known as GED (General Education Development), TASC was acquired by the state of Indiana in a decision to forego the GED program and incorporate this new TASC program. With many similarities to the GED program, TASC offers preparatory work in each of the five traditional high school subject areas: Mathematics, Science, Social Studies, Reading Language Arts, and Writing Language Arts. Once a student has completed the prep program, and it is determined by the instructor that he or she is readily equipped and academically adequate, the student will begin to take practice tests with the instructor. Upon passing the practice tests with a grade of 70% or higher, the student is then recommended to take the HSE (High School Equivalency) exam. This eight-hour HSE exam, spanning over the course of two days, consists of all five topic areas covered in the TASC prep program. Scores on the HSE exam range from 300-800, with 500 being considered a passing score. Once a student passes all five subject areas on the HSE exam, he or she will have earned their High School Equivalency Diploma and will be considered a graduate. The credentials they attain from receiving their HSE are recognized as portable. The HSE is the official high school equivalency diploma for the state of Indiana and is recognized by colleges, universities and employers in the same regard as a traditional high school diploma.
